Lonnie Ali campaigns for Bloomberg

Widow of boxing great says Bloomberg won't be intimidated by Trump

By JULIE SWIDWA
HP Staff Writer

ST. JOSEPH — Lonnie Ali, the widow of Muhammad Ali, said as much as she misses her husband, "I'm glad he's not here to see what has happened."

"I feel that our country is at a precipice of falling off a cliff with no return. If we don't do something now, there is no going back," she said. "I'm here today because even though I left here, this is still home. I have an affiliation with and a love for Michigan, and I thought maybe I could do some good."

That came in the form of stops in Benton Harbor and St. Joseph on Sunday to talk about what led to her endorsement of former New York Mayor Mike Bloomberg to become the Democratic nominee for president. Michigan's presidential primary will be held March 10.

"Muhammad built his life around people. He loved people," she said in an interview at Forte Coffee in St. Joseph. She also made a stop at the Phoenix in downtown Benton Harbor.

Muhammad and Lonnie Ali grew up and met in Louisville, Ky., and lived in Arizona in their later years, but spent summers at their second home in Berrien Springs and were well known throughout Berrien County. Muhammad died in 2016. Along with being known for his boxing fame, Ali was an activist and philanthropist. Accompanied by members of the Bloomberg campaign, Lonnie Ali was in Grand Rapids on Saturday before spending the day Sunday in Berrien County. She said Bloomberg shares many of the same passions as her late husband.

"He's made money, but he's put money where his heart is. He always uses his money for good," she said. "He's a doer, not a talker. He's a uniter, not a divider. I know in my heart this man will do everything he has laid out. When I read his platform, I thought about

Paul Gillespie, the new executive director of the Twin Cities Area Transportation Authority, has taken a circuitous route around the country in his life before ending up back home in the Twin Cities.

The travelin' man

New head of Twin Cities Area Transportation Authority has taken quite a journey

Q&A
PAUL GILLESPIE

St. Joseph native Paul Gillespie has been helping get people where they want to go in one way or another since the early 1990s, when he started driving a cab in San Francisco and worked his way up to managing the Yellow Cab of San Francisco, where he was in charge of 500 vehicles and more than 2,000 drivers.

Today, as the executive director of the Twin Cities Area Transportation Authority in Benton Harbor, he said he's still helping people with their transportation needs, only this time with a fleet of more than 20 buses and 45 drivers.

"In some ways, it's very similar, in that our job is picking people up and taking them from point A to point B," said the 1974 St. Joseph High School graduate. "And you're dealing with a fleet of vehicles and a group of drivers. The thing that is different is that this is a publicly funded agency. You have a whole other level of scrutiny and oversight and regulations that you have to deal with that I didn't have to deal with in the private sector."

Gillespie's roots run deep in the Twin Cities. His grandfather, Frank T. Gillespie, opened the first pharmacy with the Gillespie name on it in 1905 when he bought the former Howard & Pearl Drug Store in downtown St. Joseph. A pharmacy with the Gillespie name on it operated locally for 114 years, until the last one closed in February 2019.

Paul Gillespie worked in the family business as a teen but long term, that wasn't in his future. He said he did some traveling after graduating from high school and ended up attending the University of Wisconsin-Madison, where he studied the film industry for a couple of years before moving to San Francisco, where he eventually completed a degree in geography.

Gillespie sat down with Staff Writer Louise Wrege to talk about his journey from the Twin Cities to California and back.

What inspired you to move to California?

Just California dreaming. I grew up here in a small town and I love to travel. I went all over Europe when I got out of high school for about three months. I hitchhiked all around the United States for a couple of years. The first time I ever went to California, I hitchhiked all the way out there and came into San Francisco at 2 o'clock in the morning in the back of a pickup truck over the Golden Gate Bridge. It was such an amazing feeling to just enter into that city. I really fell in love with it and decided that after college, I was going to move out there to live. I spent pretty much all of my adult life, 39 years, in San Francisco. I still have a lot of fond memories there.

I worked in the film business for many years when I first moved to San Francisco. Most of the 1980s, I was the customer service manager of one of the largest film laboratories in San Francisco. We weren't Hollywood or the big feature films. We did a lot of independent films, documentaries, things like that.

How did you go from studying film to getting a degree in geography?

In Madison, I also took a lot of classes in biology and environmental studies. I've always been interested in that. Even when I was growing up here, I was part of a group, United for Survival. Back in the early 1970s in the

Buttigieg ends historic presidential campaign, urges unity

By THOMAS BEAUMONT, MEG KINNARD and STEVE PEOPLES
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Pete Buttigieg, who rose from relative obscurity as an Indiana mayor to a barrier-breaking, top-tier candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, ended his campaign on Sunday.

The decision by the first openly gay candidate to seriously contend for the presidency – and among the youngest ever – came just a day after a leading rival, Joe Biden, scored a resounding victory in South Carolina. That sparked new pressure on the party's moderate wing to coalesce behind the former vice president.

"The truth is the path has narrowed to a close for our candidacy if not for our cause," Buttigieg, 38, told supporters in South Bend, Indiana. "We must recognize that at this point in the race, the best way to keep faith with those goals and ideals is to step aside and help bring our party and country together."

He didn't endorse any of his former rivals, though he and Biden traded voicemails on Sunday. Buttigieg has spent the past several weeks warning that nominating progressive leader Bernie Sanders to take on President Donald Trump would be risky.

Buttigieg on Sunday called on supporters to ensure that a Democrat wins the White House in November and that the party's success carries over to down-ballot races for House and Senate. During previous debates, Buttigieg said Sanders could threaten Democratic seats in Congress.

More broadly, Buttigieg urged Americans to move beyond the divisive politics of the Trump era to embrace a more inclusive, unifying approach.

"Politics at its worst is ugly," he said. "But at its best, politics can lift us up. It is not just policymaking. It is moral. It is soulcraft. That's why we're in this."

Buttigieg kissed his husband, Chasten, as he walked onto the stage and offered a message for children who might be watching.

"We send a message to every

Judge rules head of immigration agency was unlawfully named

By ELLIOT SPAGAT
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — A federal judge has ruled that Ken Cuccinelli was unlawfully appointed to lead the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services agency and, as a result, lacked authority to give asylum seekers less time to prepare for initial screening interviews.

Cuccinelli, a former Virginia attorney general and an immigration hardliner, was named to a new position of "principal deputy director" in June, which immediately made him acting director because Lee Francis Cissna had just resigned. The agency grants green cards and other visas and also oversees asylum officers.

U.S. District Judge Randolph Moss in Washington found Cuccinelli's appointment violated the Federal Vacancies Reform Act, a 1998 law governing who is eligible to lead federal agencies in an acting capacity. The impact of the ruling wasn't immediately clear.

The ruling issued Sunday was at odds with President Donald Trump's penchant for temporary appointments. At Homeland Security, Chad Wolf is acting secretary, and the heads of Customs and Border Protection, Immigration and Customs Enforcement and Citizenship and Immigration Services are also in acting roles.

The judge wrote that Cuccinelli didn't qualify for exceptions for officials who won Senate approval for other positions or spent 90 days in the previous year at the agency.

The administration's reading of the law "would decimate this carefully crafted framework," Moss wrote in his 55-page ruling. "The President would be relieved of responsibility and accountability for selecting acting officials, and the universe of those eligible to serve in an acting capacity would be vastly expanded."

Moss, an appointee of President Barack Obama, set aside a Cuccinelli directive to give asylum seekers less time to consult attorneys before an initial screening interview, but his decision applies only to the five Hondurans who sued. He did not address other Cuccinelli actions.

The asylum directive gives asylum seekers at least one calendar day to prepare for the screening interview, instead of 72 hours for families and generally 48 hours for single adults. Extensions are granted only "in the most extraordinary circumstances," such as a serious illness or mental or physical disability.

The directive is a foundation for new policies aimed at quickly completing the screening, known as a "credible fear interview," without leaving Customs and Border Protection custody.

Homeland Security Department spokeswoman Heather Swift said, "We obviously disagree with the court's opinion and are looking more closely at it."

Authorities announce 2nd coronavirus death in U.S.

By CARLA K. JOHNSON and GILLIAN FLACCUS
Associated Press

Elaine Thompson / AP

An ambulance worker adjusts her protective mask as she wheels a stretcher into a nursing facility where more than 50 people are sick and being tested for the COVID-19 virus, on Saturday, in Kirkland, Wash. Health officials reported two cases of COVID-19 virus connected to the Life Care Center of Kirkland. One is a Life Care worker, a woman in her 40s who is in satisfactory condition at a hospital, and the other is a woman in her 70s and a resident at Life Care who is hospitalized in serious condition. Neither have traveled out of the country.

SEATTLE — Health officials in Washington state said Sunday night that a second person had died from the coronavirus.

Researchers said the virus may have been circulating for weeks undetected in the greater Seattle area.

In a statement, Public Health—Seattle & King County said a man in his 70s died Saturday. On Friday, health officials said a man in his 50s died of coronavirus. Both had underlying health conditions, and both were being treated at a hospital in Kirkland, Washington, east of Seattle.

Washington state now has 12 confirmed cases.

State and local authorities stepped up testing for the illness as the number of new cases grew nationwide, with new infections announced in California, Illinois, Rhode Island, New York and Washington state.

Authorities in the Seattle area said two more people had been diagnosed with the COVID-19 virus, both men in their 60s who were in critical condition, and two health care workers in California were also diagnosed.

A man in his 50s died in Washington on Saturday, and health officials said 50 more people in a nursing facility in Kirkland, Washington, are sick and being tested for the virus. On Sunday night, the International Association of Fire Fighters said 25 members who responded to calls for help at the nursing facility are being quarantined.

The first U.S. case was a Washington state man who had visited China, where the virus first emerged, but several recent cases in the U.S. have had no known connection to travelers.

In California, two health care workers in the San Francisco Bay area who cared for an earlier coronavirus patient were diagnosed with the virus on Sunday, the Alameda and Solano counties said in a joint statement.

The health care workers are both employed at NorthBay VacaValley Hospital in Vacaville, California, and had exposure to a patient treated there before being transferred to UC Davis Medical Center in Sacramento, the statement said. That patient was the first person in the U.S. discovered to have contracted the coronavirus with no known overseas travel.

Alameda County declared a state of emergency on Sunday following the news.

Elsewhere, authorities announced Sunday a third case in Illinois and Rhode Island and New York's first cases as worried Americans swarmed stores to stock up on basic goods such as bottled water, canned foods and toilet paper.

The hospitalized patient in Rhode Island is a man in his 40s who had traveled to Italy in February. New York confirmed Sunday that a woman in her late 30s contracted the virus while traveling in Iran. The patient is not in serious condition. She has respiratory symptoms and has been in a controlled situation since arriving in New York, according to a statement from the governor's office.

As the fallout continued, Vice President Mike Pence and Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar sought to reassure the American public that the federal government is working to make sure state and local authorities are able to test for the virus. Both said during a round of TV talk show appearances Sunday that thousands more testing kits had been distributed to state and local officials, with thousands more to come.

"They should know we have the best public health system in the world looking out for them," Azar said, adding that additional cases will be reported and the overall risk to Americans is low.

As the cases ticked up, some Americans stocked up on basic supplies – particularly in areas with diagnosed cases – and began to take note of the impact on daily life. Stores such as Costco sold out of toilet paper, bottled water and hand sanitizer outside Portland, Oregon, where a case was announced Friday. Sports games and practices were canceled into the coming school week. Some churches said they would not offer communion because of fears of viral spread.

As Americans prepared, researchers at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center and the University of Washington on Sunday said they had evidence the virus may have been circulating in the state for up to six weeks undetected – a finding that, if true, could mean hundreds of undiagnosed cases in the area. They posted their research online, but it was not published in a scientific journal or reviewed by other scientists.

Trevor Bedford, an associate professor who announced the preliminary findings on the virus in Washington state, said on Twitter late Saturday that genetic similarities between the state's first case on Jan. 20 and a case announced Friday indicated the newer case may have descended from the earlier one. The Jan. 20 case was the first known case in the U.S.

"I believe we're facing an already substantial outbreak in Washington State that was not detected until now due to narrow case definition requiring direct travel to China," he said on Twitter.

Some states make it harder for students to vote

By ADRIAN SAINZ
Associated Press

Adrian Sainz / AP

University of Memphis student Landon Shelby speaks with a reporter outside an off-campus voting location on Tuesday in Memphis, Tenn. Shelby, a Republican, said he would like to see the university have a polling location on campus to help students cast ballots more easily.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Vanderbilt University student Will Newell wishes it was easier for college students like him to cast ballots in Tennessee, one of 14 states holding a presidential primary on Super Tuesday.

The campus has no locations for early voting, so students must visit an off-campus polling location to cast a ballot on Election Day. Newell drives but worries that many students who don't have their own transportation won't make it to a precinct. He said some campus groups offer rides to students, but the university itself does not provide a shuttle.

He supports a bill introduced in the Tennessee Legislature that would require early voting locations at large colleges and universities in the state. That's not the only restriction working against college students in the state. Tennessee, where overall voter turnout is low, is among several states that does not allow a college student ID. But it does allow a handgun license.

"It just makes the last part of actually getting them to the polls to vote a lot more difficult," Newell, a senior public policy and economics major, said of the ballot-casting hurdles faced by students in the state.

As Democratic candidates seek a boost from young voters in 2020, their impact at the polls could be blunted in a number of states that make voting more difficult for college students. Those include laws related to voter IDs, residency requirements and on-campus polling places. Critics say many of those laws are designed to dampen turnout among voters who typically lean Democratic.

College groups aligned with the Democratic Party are mobilizing this year in an effort to defeat President Donald Trump's re-election, said Matt Nowling, national director of communications for the College Democrats of America.

"Republicans see that and they're scared," said Nowling, a junior at Denison University in Granville, Ohio. "College Democrats have been at the forefront of fighting against these issues."

Their efforts face obstacles, however.

Democrats say Republican-controlled legislatures in some states are actively trying to keep college students away from the polls. Some laws have been challenged in court, such as in New Hampshire, where a law essentially makes out-of-state college students subject to residency requirements like obtaining a state driver's license or registering their vehicles.

In Texas, Democrats have sued over a law requiring early voting locations to be open for the entire early voting period of 12 days. The law is geared to stopping "rolling polling," which allowed local governments to use temporary mobile voting sites at college campuses, nursing homes and other locations.

Supporters say it's a response to placement of temporary voting locations at high school events during elections that feature local bond measures requiring tax increases. The Texas Public Policy Foundation, a conservative think tank, calls rolling polling a "predatory practice" that causes taxpayers to suffer.

"You had the bad actors go out there and use mobile voting locations to target particular voters," said James Quintero, director of the foundation's Center for Local Governance.

Quintero said the new law allows polling places to be open on campuses for all 12 days of early voting. But Democrats have pointed to the timing of the law, which was passed months after a dramatic spike in voter turnout in 2018.

Glen Maxey, legislative affairs director for the Texas Democratic Party, said the law hurts certain voting groups, such seniors and students.

"It was very clear they were trying to stop college student voting," Maxey said.

Texas and Tennessee are among seven states where college identification cards are not allowed at polling places, with laws enacted by Republican-controlled legislatures between 2008 and 2018. The others are Arizona, Iowa, North Dakota, Ohio and South Carolina – all are states won by Donald Trump in 2016.

Bills working their way through some state legislatures also address college voting.

A law proposed by a Republican lawmaker in Arizona would prohibit students using college dormitory addresses in voter registration. The state already keeps student IDs off its list of approved voter identification. A bill proposed in the Arizona House would explicitly prohibit the use of college or university IDs at polling places.

"It's not just trying to come up with laws that directly disenfranchise students," said Rachel Clay, southeast regional director for the Campus Vote Project. "It's creating laws that make something that's already challenging and confusing more challenging and confusing for young people."

City buys building, contents from Zeke's Restaurant

Officials say move was made to ensure location remains a restaurant

By DEBRA HAIGHT
HP Correspondent

DOWAGIAC — Just a month after Zeke's Restaurant closed suddenly in downtown Dowagiac, city officials have stepped in and bought the building and contents for $350,000. The Front Street business had been scheduled to go on the auction block March 10.

Dowagiac City Manager Kevin Anderson announced the city's purchase Friday afternoon. He said he and city council members agreed that they should do everything they can to make sure the building stays a restaurant under new ownership.

He noted that Zeke's was one of the first businesses to invest 30 years ago in the city's newly renovated downtown. It has been a dining mainstay for both local residents and out of town visitors for many years.

Anderson said city officials were as surprised as everyone else when the restaurant owner announced he was closing in late January. He said that city officials had been looking at their options, including buying the building and its contents after the owner said he intended to sell the restaurant and all of its assets at auction.

"This is far from the first time we've done this, but it was not something we were looking for," Anderson said. "This was going straight to auction with the building and materials likely separated. We wanted to buy some time so the building and restaurant can be fully marketed."

"As they have done in the past, the city's elected officials and administration decided that it was in the city's best interest to use economic development funds to purchase Zeke's so that sufficient time could be given to seek a new operator of this restaurant," he added.

He said the city has set aside economic development money over the years to buy key properties in the downtown, with the fund replenished when properties sell.

He gave numerous examples of the city stepping in to buy properties to promote downtown development.

Anderson said the city bought, fixed up and then sold the property where the current Woodfire restaurant is. The city also bought and assembled properties that became the Snow Professional Building at Main and Front in 2014. In 2016, properties the city bought in the Division/Commercial Street corridor were demolished to make way for streetscape improvements.

Most recently, the city council approved a proposal from developers to buy another city-owned building on Front Street. The new owners plan to make a $350,000 investment in a mixed use development where there will be retail on the ground floor and apartments above it.

Anderson emphasized that the city will not be reopening or operating the restaurant, but will be seeking private parties interested in doing so. The city has bought the property to ensure "that this cornerstone of the downtown community" will remain intact for years to come.

The city has listed the property with Vic Kuiper of Last Bid Real Estate in Byron Center. Anderson said the company specializes in working with restaurants and the food service industry.

BCYF announces two nights of music at grandstand

Granger Smith to perform Aug. 20; tickets for fair shows go on sale Thursday

By HP STAFF

BERRIEN SPRINGS — The Berrien County Youth Fair (BCYF) has announced that not only will the Oak Ridge Boys perform at this year's fair, there will be two nights of live music.

Granger Smith, an award-winning country music artist, will perform Aug. 20 at the fair.

Smith has amassed a large following in the five years since he broke on the scene with his first hit "Backroad Song."

Born in central Texas, he taught himself to play guitar as a hobby and eventually started playing small-town gigs in North Texas, until college, according to a news release.

Smith landed his first songwriting deal with EMI Music Publishing in Nashville while he was a freshman at Texas A&M. He made the leap and moved to Tennessee the next year and over the next four years gained experience and produced numerous demos, but ultimately, he wanted to finish his degree and start a band.

He moved back to Texas A&M and started over.

Show by show, Smith's popularity began to grow but it wasn't until 2011 when the alter-ego Earl Dibbles Jr. was created that Smith's popularity went viral. His audience is known as "Yee Yee Nation" and was built through heavy touring and grassroots fan engagements.

In 2015, not long after signing a record deal with Broken Bow Music Group, "Backroad Song" became a hit on mainstream country radio.

He has released numerous other singles including "Happens Like That" and "You're In It." Somewhere along the way Smith even wrote his first book "If You're City, If You're Country" which immediately hit No. 1 on Amazon's best-selling list upon its pre-order announcement.

The BCYF announced in late December that the Oak Ridge Boys would return to the fair Aug. 19. Opening for the Boys is "The Voice" season 9 runner-up, special guest Emily Ann Roberts.

Roberts performs what is described as a fresh, new organic sound for vintage country music. Her debut album included original songs like "Stuck On Me + You"and "I've Got Forever." Her recent single is "Someday Dream."

On Aug. 17, the tractor pull will return, as will Bullmania, which includes bull riding and mutton busting, Aug. 22.

Demolition fans can catch the derby on Aug. 21. Fans will see derby classes, including big car limited weld, small trucks and SUVs, Gut n' Go front wheel drive minivans, Gut n' Go front wheel drive small cars, big trucks and powerwheels.

Aug. 18 is Kids Day, and will feature three free shows by Circus Continental in the grandstand.

Tickets for grandstand shows go on sale at 9 a.m. March 5 at the BCYF office, online at www.bcyf.org, or by phone at 473-1500. Ticket fees do not include gate admission.

The fair is celebrating its 75th anniversary with the theme of "Diamonds are Fair-ever," from Aug. 17-22.

Artwork by late WMU professor saved from destruction

KALAMAZOO (AP) — Paintings by a former art professor that would have been thrown away now are on display at Western Michigan University.

Forty of Dwayne Lowder's paintings, donated to the university, will be part of an exhibition that presents nearly 50 years of his work, WOOD-TV reported.

The exhibition at the Richmond Center for Visual Arts in Kalamazoo mostly is a display of paintings, but it also showcases Lowder's sculptures, photography and work in stained glass. It runs through March 8.

"For all of us who knew him, he was our Leonardo Da Vinci," said John Carney, a friend and former WMU colleague. "I don't care what it was, whatever he did, it was fabulous."

Carney learned the art was tucked away in Lowder's attic after he died in 2018. There were no provisions in his will, so the paintings were transferred to Radford University in Virginia, which didn't have enough space for them.

Carney took possession of the paintings and made arrangements to donate 40 to WMU.

"It's an incredible feeling of relief, and I think it would have been just heartbreaking had these paintings not see the light of day," said Indra Lacis, director of exhibits.

Lowder was a member of the WMU faculty from 1966 to 1982. He retired to rural Virginia, where he operated an orchid farm and continued to create art.

Carney shared space with Lowder for many years.

"You could get to know him up to a certain level and there was always a little bit of distance," he said.

Pictured is the Dwayne Lowder exhibit at Western Michigan University in Kalamazoo. Lowder's paintings, donated to the university, will be part of the "Dwayne Lowder exhibition" that presents nearly five decades of his artwork.

What people are saying in Southwest Michigan.

We've done some exciting projects and it's a very worthwhile career to know that we've had a life-long impact on citizens and visitors.

– BRIAN BAILEY
Longtime Berrien County Parks director, who announced he is retiring May 15

Today we are grabbing the bull by the horns and announcing a run for re-election in the 6th District. There is unfinished business we have to complete – Cures 2.0, fighting the opioid epidemic, immigration reform, and protecting the Great Lakes, among others.

– FRED UPTON
U.S. representative from St. Joseph, ending speculation that he might retire

The next time you walk down Phoenix, the next time you drive down Williams ... if you've ever spent time on South Beach or walking along Monroe Boulevard where we acquired additional space to extend the beach ... these are all projects that Deb had her fingerprints on.

– BRIAN DISSETTE
South Haven city manager, on the retirement announcement of Deb Davidson, the city's communications manager, Downtown Development Authority director and grant writer/administrator.

I want to make sure there's clarity. This is not automatic. It is a local decision in the individual districts to choose.

– DAVE EICHBERG
Berrien Springs superintendent, on the granting of a state waiver that gives county school districts the option to start classes before Labor Day

Is intelligence community planning to meddle in 2020 election?

Byron York

Recently the intelligence community made clear it will be a player in the 2020 presidential election. No one should be surprised.

On February 13, the House Intelligence Committee held a meeting at which intel officials briefed lawmakers on foreign efforts to influence U.S. elections. By several accounts, the officials told the committee that Russia is working to re-elect President Trump.

A number of Republican committee members were deeply skeptical. What the officials said was classified, so they cannot discuss it publicly, but in conversations later, GOP lawmakers made it clear that the intel officials did not have the evidence to support their assertion.

"How should reporting take place?" one member said later. "You would say, 'We believe X is true based on A, B, C and D.' When that doesn't happen, it's very suspect."

"If you're going to make an accusation like that, you darn well better be ready to answer questions and have evidence to support it," said another member. When pressed, the member added, officials gave "very vague and unsatisfying answers."

The Republicans' objection was not to the idea that Russia is trying to interfere in a U.S. election. That is an accepted fact.

The problem was the assessment that Russia is specifically trying to help re-elect Trump. That claim, so incendiary in the 2016 election, was unsupported by the evidence, they said.

As they left the meeting, Republicans agreed that the news would leak soon. It almost seemed to be why Democratic Rep. Adam Schiff, the committee chairman and impeachment leader, had called the meeting in the first place.

No one was surprised when, a week later, The New York Times published a story headlined "Lawmakers Are Warned That Russia Is Meddling to Re-elect Trump." The news quickly became another one of those bombshell reports that consume hours of talk on cable TV.

Democrats, who were also barred by law from revealing classified information, were nevertheless happy to play along. For example, not long after the story broke, Democratic Rep. Jim Himes, an Intelligence Committee member, appeared on CNN.

"I can't talk about what happened in a classified setting," Himes said. "But ... you don't need an intelligence briefing to think about what Vladimir Putin might want. Would he want a return to sort of conventional, much more confrontational policy with respect to Russia? Or might he want a president who will criticize everybody on the planet except Vladimir Putin?"

Himes's point was clear: I can't talk about it, but of course Putin is working to re-elect Trump.

The problem was, intel officials did not have the evidence to make that assertion. And almost as soon as the story broke, officials with knowledge of the meeting suggested that the headlines were wrong. On Sunday, CNN reported that Pierson had apparently "overstated" the Putin-wants-Trump story.

And then there were the circumstances of the briefing. The intelligence community works for the president. Yet officials chose to brief Chairman Schiff's House Intelligence Committee on this extraordinarily consequential finding before telling the president.

Whatever the motive, spilling the beans in a room with dozens of people present – intel officials brought a lot of staff with them – increased the chances of precisely the type of leak that occurred.

The whole thing hit the White House by surprise. "I have not seen that analysis," national security adviser Robert O'Brien told ABC Sunday, referring to the Putin-wants-Trump assessment. "I've been with the leaders of the Intelligence Committee. They don't have it. So if there's some lower-level people at [Office of the Director of National Intelligence] that came in and gave this analysis to the House – look, I'd like to see it. But I haven't seen it."

Later, just to make matters more difficult, there were leaks that Russia is also trying to help elect Bernie Sanders. The leak left many experts baffled – except to the extent that, with the Trump leak, it seemed to target the intelligence community's two least-favorite candidates.

There were lots of reports that President Trump was angry after the news broke. And why shouldn't he be angry? Way back in January 2017, when Trump was president-elect and protesting that the intelligence community was out to get him, Democratic Sen. Charles Schumer famously said, "You take on the intelligence community, they have six ways from Sunday of getting back at you."

The years that followed proved that to be true. And it still is.

History Lesson

Dred Scott was a slave who traveled with his owner, an Army doctor, whose job took him to many states, including northern states in which slavery was outlawed. Therefore, when his owner died Scott sued for his freedom, claiming his time in free states made him a free person.

When the case, Dred Scott v. Sandford, reached the Supreme Court this week (March 6) in 1857, Chief Justice Roger Taney (a southerner and lifelong slave owner) ruled Scott wasn't a U.S. citizen, and therefore had no standing to sue in a U.S. court. It didn't matter whether Scott was a slave or free. What disqualified him from U.S. citizenship was his African heritage.

Taney based his decision on jus sanguinis – that one's biological origins were the determining factor in judging citizenship, so even free negroes of African descent were not U.S. citizens. "A free negro of the African race, whose ancestors were brought to this country and sold as slaves, is not a 'citizen' within the meaning of the Constitution," Taney ruled.

Fast forward to 1868. The Civil War was over and the 13th Amendment was ratified freeing all slaves, which meant the "Three-fifths Compromise" written into the Constitution in 1787 no longer applied. It said slaves counted as three-fifths of a white person in determining a state's population – and therefore also determining how many members states sent to the House of Representatives based on their population. But free blacks were now whole people, meaning huge increases in the populations of former slave states, meaning many more representatives from southern states in Congress, giving them far more political power, which they would undoubtedly use to pass laws aimed at restoring the South to the ante bellum (before the war) status quo.

Thus, as a defense mechanism, the northern states thought it crucial that now-free blacks be able to vote, which only U.S. citizens could do.

At the time the northern-dominated Congress was considering a fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, one section of which outlined how southern states would be reincorporated into the Union. So language was included in this amendment stating that U.S. citizenship would be based on jus solis – on place of birth – not biological descent. "All citizens born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States…" the 14th Amendment's language famously states, and in 1868 most blacks had been born in America.

Finally, as a second defense mechanism, the language also stated that if any citizens – including blacks – are denied the right to vote, the number of "Representatives in Congress" from that state will be reduced in proportion to the number of citizens denied that right.

Sanders and Bloomberg both want to run your life

Steve Chapman

The Democratic primary battle between Bernie Sanders and Michael Bloomberg could be easily resolved if they would realize how much they have in common. In fact, they would make a great ticket. Imagine the slogan: "Sanders-Bloomberg: Because you're tired of running your own life."

Being a moderate libertarian – or a libertarian moderate, I'm not quite sure – I'm partial to those passages in the Constitution that say, "Congress shall make no law." I have a high regard for both free markets and civil liberties, for both abortion rights and gun rights, for a humane safety net and fiscal prudence. The best government is one that performs only clearly essential functions and performs those well – while recognizing its limits not only at home but also abroad.

Anyone of this general cast of mind, of course, can no more tolerate Donald Trump than a lamb could lie down with a Tyrannosaurus rex. It's hard to remember a president so contemptuous of such a wide range of liberties.

Freedom of speech? He wanted NFL players banished for kneeling during the national anthem. Freedom of the press? He regards the media as "the enemy of the people." Freedom from unreasonable search and seizure? Trump pulled back federal efforts to curb police abuses. Reproductive rights? Since the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe v. Wade decision, they have never been at greater risk.

He doesn't like laissez-faire capitalism, as evidenced by his hostility to international trade, his bullying of corporations that don't obey his commands and his bailouts of farmers. He has installed a legion of knaves, hacks and toadies to mishandle the indispensable tasks of the federal government – such as fighting global pandemics or protecting the environment. His fiscal record is a fright.

Either Sanders or Bloomberg would be an improvement, in the same way that it would be better to be trampled by beagles than by buffaloes. But each of these Democrats has plenty of debits on his record. Neither has much commitment to individual freedom as a matter of principle.

Sanders has only contempt for people who gain great wealth by creating something that people want. He wants to punish them even if they have made our lives better.

It's unfair to suggest that his policies would resemble communism. But his defense of Marxist regimes suggests a willingness to excuse harsh methods to advance what he sees as worthy purposes.

Sanders' proposal for national rent control combines economic illiteracy with gross federal overreach. He believes in "Medicare for All" – and he does mean all, including those who would rather keep their private health insurance. It's hard to escape the suspicion that in Sanders' mind, the compulsory nature of his plan is not a necessary evil but a supreme virtue.

Then there's the matter of paying for it. As The New York Times reported, he "estimated Sunday night on '60 Minutes' that the price tag for his 'Medicare for All' plan would be about $30 trillion over 10 years, but the revenue he identifies for it in the new outline totals about $17.5 trillion."

Bloomberg is overbearing and intrusive in his own way. As New York City mayor, he barred many businesses from selling sugary drinks larger than 16 ounces on "public health" grounds – though a court overruled him. He waged war on flavored tobacco products and trans fats and required chain restaurants to post calorie counts.

He even deployed full-court pressure tactics to get new mothers to breast-feed, regardless of their needs or desires. The presumption of personal autonomy never found a place in Bloomberg's heart.

His faith in coercion helps account for his support of stop-and-frisk tactics by New York police, which put a target on the backs of young Hispanic and African American men, the vast majority of them innocent. Under Bloomberg, the number of such encounters soared seven-fold. Though he now claims credit for reducing them, the reality is that a federal judge ruled the practice unconstitutional.

When that decision came down, Bloomberg raised fears of "a lot of people dying." In fact, crime declined after stop and frisk was drastically curtailed. Bloomberg put his instincts above the liberties of New Yorkers, and his instincts proved wrong.

What he and Sanders share is an eagerness to override individual freedom whenever it hinders their plans and an impatience with limits on government authority. Their grand schemes are not as toxic or alarming as Trump's. But under any of these three, the right to be left alone would be left in the lurch.

LEGISLATIVE ROLL CALL

Weekly Roll Call Report for the Herald Palladium

Senate Resolution B, Deny Heartwell nomination to chair Natural Resources Commission: Passed 20 to 17 in the Senate

To disapprove the appointment by Gov. Gretchen Whitmer of former Grand Rapids mayor George Heartwell as chairman of Michigan Natural Resources Commission. This follows the (reportedly related) Feb. 13 denial of Anna Mitterling's appointment to this commission, which has "exclusive authority to regulate the taking of game and sportfish" and designating which species may or may not be hunted. Heartwell's nomination is opposed by the National Rifle Association because of his role as a "state membership coordinator" of antigun groups organized by former New York City mayor and current Democratic presidential candidate Michael Bloomberg.

21	Sen. Kim LaSata	R – Bainbridge Township	Y
26	Sen. Aric Nesbitt	R – Lawton	Y

Senate Bill 669, Revise state hospital rationing law ("certificate of need"): Passed 21 to 16 in the Senate

To revise the powers of a state Certificate of Need (CON) commission that are related to "capital expenditures" for a new hospital or clinic, or expansion of an existing one. This commission has the power to approve or deny facility expansions, as well as any changes in the location, purpose or number of beds allowed in an existing facility, or plans to offer more clinical services. The Senate Fiscal Agency reports that the proposed change would have little practical effect because these regulated capital expenditures "are used to finance expansions of facilities and those expansions themselves require a certificate of need" from the commission.

This and similar laws in other states were enacted under a federal mandate in the 1970s with the intention of lowering health care spending by reducing investment in the field; 15 states have repealed the laws but 35 states, including Michigan, still have them.

21	Sen. Kim LaSata	R – Bainbridge Township	Y
26	Sen. Aric Nesbitt	R – Lawton	Y

Senate Bill 672, Revise psychiatric hospital rationing ("certificate of need"): Passed 21 to 16 in the Senate

To exempt psychiatric hospitals or units from the rationing restrictions imposed under a state Certificate of Need law that requires medical service providers to get permission from a panel of existing providers before adding new or expanded facilities. In return for the exemption, private psychiatric hospitals and units would have to maintain half their beds for "public patients," defined as ones receiving social welfare benefits, or subject to a treatment order signed by a clinical psychiatrist, or deemed by a court to be a threat to themselves or others.

21	Sen. Kim LaSata	R – Bainbridge Township	Y
26	Sen. Aric Nesbitt	R – Lawton	Y

Senate Bill 686, Create state employee whistleblower protection law: Passed 37 to 0 in the Senate

To establish a state employee whistleblower protection law that prohibits a state department or agency from retaliating against a person for communicating with a legislator on the way the department or agency is performing its duties.

21	Sen. Kim LaSata	R – Bainbridge Township	Y
26	Sen. Aric Nesbitt	R – Lawton	Y

House Bill 5266, Require electric coops give telecoms equal access to utility poles: Passed 37 to 0 in the Senate

To require member-owned electric cooperatives to provide video, broadband, wireless or other telecommunication service providers with "non-discriminatory" access to their utility poles under reasonable rates, terms and conditions, and also establish a process for resolving disputes.

21	Sen. Kim LaSata	R – Bainbridge Township	Y
26	Sen. Aric Nesbitt	R – Lawton	Y

House Bill 4740, Establish another "dark sky preserve": Passed 106 to 1 in the House

To designate Dr. T. K. Lawless Park in Cass County as a "dark sky preserve." The term is not defined in this or a related statute but in general it means restricting outdoor lighting to a minimum.

66	Rep. Beth Griffin	R – Mattawan	Y

House Bill 4736, Ban using open records requests to locate huntable game: Passed 85 to 22 in the House

To prohibit using information obtained in response to an open records request seeking Department of Natural Resources records related to resource-related restoration, management or research projects, for the purpose of locating game to hunt. This and House Bill 4735 would authorize a process by which an individual seeking such records could sign a form attesting that he or she will not use the information to take game or help others do so, subject to misdemeanor penalties for violations

Rain, art and winter wonderlands at Paris Fashion Week

By THOMAS ADAMSON

Francois Mori / AP

A model wears a creation for the Valentino fashion collection during Women's fashion week Fall / Winter 2020 / 21 presented in Paris, Sunday.

PARIS — Haunting music greeted drizzled-on VIP guests, including singer Janelle Monáe, who braved torrential rains in Paris to get to Valentino's experimental fashion show near the Invalides monument on Sunday. At Issey Miyake, a lone artist strode out to create an artistic installation on a vast white sheet of wall paper that had guests reaching for their cameras. Here are some highlights of the fall-winter 2020 ready-to-wear shows at Paris Fashion Week.

Valentino experiments with subtle kink

Valentino's designer Pierpaolo Piccioli has been in an experimental mood of late.

In Sunday's ready-to-wear show at Paris Fashion Week, this was more than apparent as the Italian-born designer dramatically departed from the house's oft-angelic signature designs. It was a nice change. In the place of purity this season was subtle kink.

See-through black mesh gowns followed sheeny thigh-high black leather boots, while split-leg bustier gowns bore inches of flesh and some visible nipples.

Even the Renaissance-style capes, a Valentino touchstone for ages, were crafted for this fall in a provocative sheeny black on a model with dark eye make-up, stomping black wedge boots and long blood-red leather gloves. This angel had fallen from heaven long ago, the show seemed to say.

Aside from the kinky elements, there were lots great fashion-forward plays on shape. A black scarf insert fell off the back of one shoulder with an off-kilter air, like the single fallen wing of a dark angel.

Issey Miyake's visual poetry

With a black felt-tip pen at the start of Issey Miyake's Paris fashion show, an artist sketched out a human shape on a paper sheet with speed and impressive precision. Then, to gasps from the audience, that shape – and others next to it – were cut out.

As sections of paper fell to the ground, models appeared from behind the holes.

It was an imaginative start to designer Satoshi Kondo's fall show, which began with a geometric series that riffed on this idea of thick lines cut out on clothes. All sorts of shapes and square sections flickered out. The collection soon expanded into bright hues – with sheeny silk fabrics, weaves in extra-fine nylon yarn and colorful knits.

Several busy jazzy prints – one in particular in apricot – seemed a little unnecessary and distracted from the beautiful shapes in the designs. But Kondo made up for it with a deft play in form using the codes of the Japanese maison.

Silk dresses curved back around at the bottom – like a sort of parachute sleeve – and formed a cape-hybrid. It filled with air as the models walked, and in the beautiful motion, it seemed as if the models might take flight.

Chanel to live-stream

Luxury French brand Chanel said in addition to hosting its Paris Fashion Week show Tuesday, it will live-stream it on all of the storied house's social media platforms and its website, due to the new coronavirus outbreak.

Editors, such as those from China, who have not traveled to Paris or others in the industry who have anxiety over possibly contracting COVID-19 can thus see the display.

France has banned all indoor public gatherings of more than 5,000 people to slow its snowballing spread of virus cases and recommending that people no longer greet each other with kisses. At Paris Fashion Week, this has created a new form of greeting – the elbow touch. The number of French virus cases almost doubled to 100 over the weekend, including two deaths.

Chanel's U.S. office staff will not be in Paris for the show, owing to fears over the virus.

Thom Browne's gender-fluid pinstripes

The pinstripe-suited and gender-fluid designs of inventive U.S. designer Thom Browne were shown again this season in a winter wonderland snowscape where spring was a frozen garden, fall was a white wood.

Models, in twos, passed through large wooden doors in the center of the runway – evoking the magical furniture in C.S. Lewis' Narnia chronicle "The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe."

Indeed, animal masks – such as a horse and a rhino – appeared on some models, who also had handbags in the form of a dog and other creatures. The models wore unusual black mesh headgear that shrouded the eyes.

Fashion-wise, the wacky designs meshed multicolored stripes and the occasional lozenge-shaped argyll check, often in socks, in intentionally divergent styles. One blown-up check plaid in Yankees blue was inserted unexpectedly as the sleeves of a striped coat, above a gray skirt and white-laced snow boots.

Corset-style items and large bows on the hip – almost celebrating a Christmas gift – added to Browne's magical eccentricity.

Montana open government champion John Kuglin dies at 78

By MATT VOLZ
Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — John Kuglin, a former Associated Press bureau chief for Montana and Wyoming who was a champion for open government and the public's right to know, has died, his son said Saturday. He was 78.

Tom Kuglin, a reporter and assistant editor for Helena's Independent Record, said his father died overnight at home in Helena after a prolonged illness.

John Kuglin oversaw coverage of some of the biggest stories to come out of Montana, such as the arrest of Unabomber Ted Kaczynski in 1996 and the FBI standoff with the anti-government Freemen that same year.

One of Kuglin's enduring legacies is the Montana Freedom of Information Hotline, which he started in 1988 as a way to give journalists and citizens free legal advice on public records and open government meetings.

Charles Johnson, a retired Montana statehouse reporter and former member of the FOI Hotline's board of directors, said Kuglin founded the hotline at the urging of a retired judge who criticized the media for not being more involved in cases that affected open government.

"John was the hotline's heart and soul," Johnson said. "As The Associated Press bureau chief for Montana, John was able to convince a number of newspapers, TV and radio stations to join the AP in bringing successful lawsuits, including one that opened legislative caucuses."

Today, Mike Meloy, the attorney retained by the hotline, receives more than 100 open-government queries a year.

Tom Kuglin said it meant a lot to his father to establish the FOI Hotline as a resource for journalists and the general public.

"He truly believed in that aspect of the Montana Constitution, the public's right to know," Tom Kuglin said.

John Kuglin was born in Chicago and graduated from Colorado College with a degree in history before he began his 40-year journalism career. He was a reporter for the Colorado Springs Free Press and the Gazette-Telegraph, then he moved to Montana, where he worked for the Missoulian and the Independent Record in 1965.

He covered Montana government for the Great Falls Tribune before he was hired on at the AP, working stints in Spokane, Washington, and Cheyenne, Wyoming, before moving to Helena. He became the bureau chief for Montana and Wyoming and retired in 2005 after a 31-year AP career.

His successor, Jim Clarke, who is now the AP's regional director for the West, compared himself following in Kuglin's footsteps to the baseball player who replaced the legendary Lou Gehrig.

"John Kuglin is a giant in Montana journalism," Clarke said. "If it has to do with government transparency, freedom of information or just making sure Montana politicians stayed worried about Montana journalists, John Kuglin either invented it or had a seat at the table when it happened."

Former AP news editor John MacDonald said Kuglin hired him in 1990 as a relief staffer and then a decade later as news editor in his home state of Montana.

"John was a champion of the free press and a staunch defender of Montana's constitutional right-to-know," MacDonald said. "More than that, he was a good man and a damn fine fisherman."

When the jail population exceeds capacity for seven consecutive days, state law requires local officials to declare an overcrowding emergency.

BUTTIGIEG

kid out there wondering if whatever marks them out as different means they are somehow destined to be less than," Buttigieg said. "To see that someone who once felt that exact same way can become a leading American presidential candidate with his husband by his side."

Voters saw Buttigieg in the more moderate lane of the Democratic field, and he flourished early with a top finish in the Iowa caucuses and a close second place finish in New Hampshire. But as the race moved to more diverse states, less dependent on college-educated voters, Buttigieg struggled.

Despite robust organizations in Iowa and New Hampshire and supporters who included an influx of former independents and Republicans, Buttigieg failed to overcome daunting questions about his ability to draw African American support key to the Democratic base.

He earned just 3 percent of the nonwhite vote in South Carolina's Saturday primary, according to AP VoteCast, a a wide-ranging survey of the electorate.

As mayor of a city that is 25 percent black, Buttigieg faced criticism for firing the first African American police chief in the history of South Bend and for his handling of the case of a white police officer who fatally shot an armed black man in June.

Matt Rourke / AP

Democratic presidential candidate and former South Bend, Ind. Mayor Pete Buttigieg speaks with members of the media, Sunday, in Plains, Ga.

A Black Lives Matter group from South Bend released a statement saying it was "excited" that Buttigieg left the race. "We hope that he learned his lesson – that neoliberalism and anti-Black policies will no longer be tolerated," the group wrote.

After his unexpected rise to contention in Iowa and New Hampshire last fall, Buttigieg became the target of Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren for the high-dollar fundraisers he was hosting, notably one in a wine cave in California.

Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar also went at Buttigieg in the months before the caucuses for lacking national experience. She noted that he had lost his only statewide race as a candidate for Indiana treasurer in 2010, while she had won three statewide terms in Minnesota in part by carrying Republican-heavy regions.

Buttigieg presented a starkly different figure on the debate stage than the other leading candidates – all septuagenarians – and drew admirers for his calm, reasoned demeanor and rhetorical skills that reflected his Harvard-trained, Rhodes scholar background but that some voters and operatives described as "robotic."

Buttigieg had modeled his campaign somewhat on that of former President Barack Obama, who won the 2008 Iowa caucuses largely based on a message of unity and by drawing in a healthy bloc of first-time caucus participants, often the key in a crowded, high-turnout contest.

Jim Ward, a volunteer on the campaign in South Bend, said he and others were at the local campaign office training at around 6 p.m. when they learned of Buttigieg's decision.

"They got word and left rather quickly," he said in a text with the AP, noting that he had mixed emotions.

"I am so proud the campaign and proud of Pete for making this decision when he's making it and not prolonging the campaign any longer than necessary," Ward said. "I am just so, so sad that it didn't work out this time."

Democratic strategist David Axelrod said "the Pete Buttigieg story isn't over."

"He's 38 years old," Axelrod said. "He's vaulted himself into the national conversation. He obviously has work to do on some things that – some weaknesses we've seen in this election – but whenever there is a conversation again about Democratic candidates, he'll be in that conversation. And that's a remarkable achievement, given where he started a year ago."

Warm winter nixes special German wine

By DAVID MCHUGH
Associated Press

FRANKFURT, Germany — A warm winter means that, for apparently the first time in the history of German winemaking, the country's fabled vineyards will produce no ice wine – a pricey, golden nectar made from grapes that have been left to freeze on the vine.

The German Wine Institute said Sunday that none of the country's wine regions saw the necessary low temperature of minus 7 degrees Celsius, or 19 degrees Fahrenheit.

A succession of warm winters have cut into ice wine production recently, the institute said, noting that in 2017 only seven producers managed to make it, and only five managed it in 2013.

"If warm winters become more frequent over the coming years, ice wines from Germany's regions will soon become an even more expensive rarity than they already are," said wine institute spokesman Ernst Buescher.

Buescher said the institute knew of no vintage year in this century or last when no ice wine was made, and since winters were colder in the 19th century, it assumed that the latest harvest was the first one to create no ice wine since production began in 1830.

Freezing the grapes before they are crushed concentrates the sugar and leads to an intensely sweet, golden wine often served with dessert. It has always been an niche product with around 0.1 percent of German production, and expensive due to low volumes.

GILLESPIE

Twin Cities it was very active in a lot of environmental issues. We did work on preserving Grand Mere and stopping the sand mining that was going on in the lakefront near Bridgman.

How does a degree in geography get you to transportation?

It was geography and environmental studies, so a lot of my classes focused on energy and transportation. I became very aware in the late 1980s of what people are now calling the climate crisis.

Back then, it was just global warming and people were just beginning to understand the implications of what's happening. I really went back to learn all I could about the science and some of the alternative technologies that are out there that might be able to deal with it. And public transit has always been one of the big solutions so people can share rides and have cleaner technologies.

When I went back to school in the 1990s, I went to school during the day and started driving a taxi at night. When I graduated, I met Willie Brown, who was the mayor of San Francisco at the time. He was putting together a taxi task force to look at the industry and I got appointed to that. The task force recommended the creation of a taxi commission. When that was created, Mayor Brown appointed me to the (San Francisco) Taxi Commission. I was working very closely with the guy who's now the governor of California, Gavin Newson, who was a city supervisor at the time. He ran the taxi commission.

I spent 10 years on that. My fellow commissioners elected me as president (2006-09). I was able to do a lot of things. We converted our entire taxi fleet to hybrid vehicles. We cut our greenhouse gas emissions in half. We were the first city to have wheelchair accessible taxis. I've gotten a lot of recognition for that. We pioneered that.

Why did you move back to Southwest Michigan?

Oh, there's a lot of reasons. Most of my family and friends are still here. And I needed to start looking after members of my family who are getting up there in age. My dad (Bill Gillespie) died a few years ago, but my mom (Trudy Gillespie) still lives in St. Joe in the house I was born in in the mid-1950s.

And I missed the lake. One of the things that I really loved to do is go hiking along the lake.

And San Francisco has changed a lot over the years. It's becoming a very exclusive and wealthy place. I'll always love California, but this was a good time for me. I feel like I'm young enough to have another career back here.

You missed Lake Michigan? What do you like about the lake over the Pacific Ocean?

There's no salt and there's no sharks. I just love the lake. I love the sunsets. I love walking along the piers. I love Warren Dunes. I love climbing the dunes. I had both of my hips replaced last year. Ever since I was a kid, I would climb the dunes and for the past seven years, I couldn't do it. Now, I can walk those dunes again. I was so happy.

People don't hitchhike much anymore. Was it safe back then?

The '70s were a great decade for me. I hitchhiked to over 30 states in the United States. I took a couple trips out west. I followed the Mississippi River down to New Orleans on Highway 61 one summer.

That's when people did hitchhike. You don't see too much of it anymore. But back in the '70s, it was a fairly common way of seeing the world. People perceive it as dangerous now, or they don't have the same spirit of adventure that we had.

Benton Harbor. People are hopeless, and Mike can bring hope."

She said she supports Bloomberg's views on climate change, the environment, an all-in economy where everyone can move up, education and re-training people for today's jobs, health care and responsible gun control.

Lonnie said she and Muhammad met and accompanied Bloomberg to South Korea in 2012 when he was trying to bring the Olympics to New York. She has met with him since, once at his place of business, Bloomberg LLC.

"I was impressed by his management style. He's not in a cubicle somewhere. His desk is out on the floor with everybody else," she said. "We all have faults but he's learned from his mistakes and he has no problem apologizing and fixing his mistakes. Muhammad always said the man at 50 who thinks the same as at 30 has wasted 20 years of his life. My first obligation is to my husband's legacy. We should all be in a race to do good. And Mike Bloomberg is in a race to do good. He is about helping people."

She said she started thinking about a year and a half ago about who she would like to see run against Donald Trump.

"I'm concerned about the hatred and lack of civility, climate change and the prosperity of Americans. I started looking for someone who can restore faith in our Democratic institution that has served us well for over 200 years. Someone who can identify the problem and have a pragmatic solution that will get done, not pie in the sky. The only person I knew who could do that was Mike Bloomberg, who already was supporting the causes through his philanthropy. I believe he is the one who can actually do what he says he'll do, and reach across the aisle," she said.

Although he's a rich man now, she said, "Mike did not come from money. His father made $6,000 a year as a bookkeeper at a dairy farm. His father died when he was in college and his mother had to go to work. Mike was trained as an electrical engineer and was laid off from his job at age 39. That's when he opened his own company."

Lonnie said she is confidant Bloomberg can beat Donald Trump. "Yes, I am. He's not intimidated by him. I'm not here to disparage Donald Trump. I just know he's not the one to lead this country," she said.

Lonnie added that Bloomberg has made it clear that if he does not become the Democratic nominee, he will support whoever is.

Lakeshore wrestling defeated by Gaylord in state semifinals

KALAMAZOO — Lakeshore's Division 2 wrestling semifinal match went wrong from the start on Saturday.

Gaylord defeated the Lancers 45-23 to advance to the title match. Lowell repeated as state champion, defeating Gaylord 53-4.

"We needed to get the coin toss," Lakeshore coach Bruce Bittenbender said. "We lost the coin toss, so we had to put the guy on the mat first."

The match began at 152 pounds. Bittenbender said he was hoping to maneuver his 145-pounder James Harris away from wrestling Gaylord's Chayse LaJoie, a two-time state champion, but having to put out the first wrestler made that matchup unavoidable. LaJoie eventually pinned Harris in 53

Michigan Lutheran humble ahead of districts

Girls basketball postseason begins today

By HP STAFF

Michigan Lutheran's girls basketball team has just one loss this season.

That loss, a 54-34 defeat to potential district opponent New Buffalo, has the Titans not taking anything for granted as they head into the Division 4 district at River Valley this week.

"It taught us that you're not infallible, you can be beat," Titans coach Ron Briney said. "Whereas I certainly know that as a coach, I think the kids got a taste of that. It brought some focus that we needed."

District play begins today for many area girls basketball teams. There are just four teams competing at River Valley, so the action there won't start until Wednesday. Michigan Lutheran (19-1) opens against River Valley (12-8), and Lake Michigan Catholic (11-9) takes on New Buffalo (16-4).

Michigan Lutheran was the top seed and New Buffalo second in the MHSAA's new seeding system, guaranteeing them spots on opposite sides of the bracket. All four teams are familiar with each other, as they finished in the top four spots in the Berrien-Cass-St. Joseph Conference White Division.

"LMC has had some really nice wins and improved down the stretch," Briney said. "(Coach) Jason Alexander does a great job with (River Valley), we've had some great games with them, hard-fought games and been fortunate to come out on top. New Buffalo we split, so that district is wide open."

Division 1 at Lakeshore

St. Joseph (11-9) opens with top-seeded Portage Central (17-3). The Bears split the season series with Portage Central, but have lost four straight, including a 31-22

No. 23 Buckeyes surge late to beat No. 19 Michigan

By MITCH STACY
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — After slogging through a miserable January, No. 23 Ohio State has won eight of its last 10 games, a surge that culminated in a 77-63 victory over No. 19 Michigan in front of sold-out crowd Sunday.

Ohio St. 77 Michigan 63

The Buckeyes (20-9, 10-8 Big Ten) did it by overwhelming the Wolverines late. After Michigan's Jon Teske hit a 3-pointer to tie the game at 54 with 6:41 left, CJ Walker's jumper and back-to-back 3s by brothers Andre and Kaleb Wesson touched off a 23-9 Ohio State run to cap the victory.

Ohio State was led by its guards, but all five starters hit double figures. Duane Washington Jr. tied a career high with 20 points, and Walker had 15 and a career-tying six rebounds. Andre Wesson and Kaleb Wesson each had 14 points.

The resurgence from Ohio State came after a 2-6 start in Big Ten play in 2020 and the announcement that guard D.J. Carton was leaving the team for mental health reasons.

"Listen, we realize plenty of people wrote us off," Ohio State coach Chris Holtmann said. "When we were 2-6 they made fun of us. We had people kind of making fun of us and, you know, putting all their sarcastic tweets out there. I got them all saved. All of them."

The Buckeyes have won three straight, swept the season series against Michigan, winning 61-58 in Ann Arbor on Feb. 4, and reached 20 wins for the third straight season and the 30th time in school history.

Franz Wagner had 18 points and 10 rebounds for the Wolverines (18-11, 9-9), who lost their second straight after winning five in a row.

The two teams have followed s similar pattern: a hot start, January doldrums and improved play down the stretch.

Ohio State led 32-29 at the half behind Washington's 12 points and 3-for-4 shooting from 3-point range. The Buckeyes did not allow Michigan an offensive rebound in the first half.

RAINING 3s

Both coaches acknowledged that late 3-pointers from the Wesson brothers was the spark that pushed Ohio State ahead to stay.

The Buckeyes had a 56-54 lead when Andre Wesson hit a falling 3-pointer that banked in off the glass. Then, after a defensive rebound by Ohio State, Kaleb hit a

Michigan State basketball shows 'fire' in key victory over Maryland

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — It was less than two weeks ago that Tom Izzo conceded winning even a share of the Big Ten was more than a long shot.

Michigan St. 78 Maryland 66

The Spartans had lost four of five games, a stretch that was capped by them blowing a seven-point lead in the final three minutes at home against Maryland.

It was, by far, the low point of the season.

Instead of packing things in, however, Michigan State has quickly turned things around, rolling over Nebraska, then getting a hard-fought win early this week at home against Iowa.

And on Saturday night, No. 24 Michigan State declared the race for the Big Ten title isn't over just yet.

With No. 9 Maryland set to clinch a share of the conference title, the Spartans responded with one of their best games of the season, jumping on the Terrapins early and never letting up on their way to a 78-66 victory at a jam-packed Xfinity Center.

"As you can imagine that was a hell of a win for us," Michigan State coach Tom Izzo said. "I told them that we have to start playing for other people. I told him that if you just play for yourself, it's not rewarding. So I said, 'You've got to pick somebody. Pick your girlfriend, pick your teammate, pick the players that played here before you and did such a good job.' And really the thing I talked to them about is – we all know Cassius (Winston) has been through a lot this year, and I told our guys play for him, play for those seniors and the guys that have built this thing.

"I thought there was a little more fire from the opening get-go and because of that we played a very good game against a very, very, very good team."

The win pulls Michigan State (20-9, 12-6 Big Ten) within a game of Maryland (23-6, 13-5) with two games to play in the regular season. The Spartans play at Penn State on Tuesday and host

IN BRIEF

Brunelle, Notre Dame women top No. 19 FSU 70-67

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Freshman Sam Brunelle drilled a career-high seven 3-pointers and scored 25 points and Notre Dame rallied to defeat No. 19 Florida State 70-67 on Sunday to close the regular season.

Down three after a Notre Dame free throw with five seconds to go, Florida State's Nikki Ekhomu was fouled on a 3-point attempt with a second left. Ekhomu missed the first free throw, made the second and was called for a turnover with an intentional miss on the third. The Irish added a free throw.

The Irish were down 41-30 when the Seminoles scored the first six points of the second half but Brunelle's 3-pointer with a second left in the third quarter cut the deficit to 52-50.

Marta Sniezek, a graduate transfer from Stanford, had eight of her 10 points in the fourth quarter, including the layup that put the Irish up 68-66 with 35 seconds left. FSU missed a pair of shots before Destinee Walker made a free throw with five seconds left to up the lead to 69-66.

Mikayla Vaughn scored 12 points for the Irish (13-17, 8-10), who take a three-game winning streak into the first round of the ACC tournament in Greensboro, N.C., on Wednesday.

Sarr, Wake Forest deal blow to Irish NCAA hopes

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Another day, another career-high scoring day for Wake Forest 7-footer Olivier Sarr.

The 7-foot Sarr scored 30 points, making 12 of 16 shots, and grabbed 17 rebounds Saturday afternoon for the Demon Deacons (13-15, 6-12 ACC), who pulled away late for an 84-73 victory over Notre Dame, dealing a significant blow to the Fighting Irish's NCAA Tournament hopes.

With a 10-0 run down the stretch, the Deacons won despite squandering a 16-point, first-half lead.

On Wednesday, Sarr scored a then-career-high 25 points in Wake's double-overtime victory over No. 7 Duke. Against Notre Dame (18-11, 9-9), Sarr outdueled 6-9 Irish forward John Mooney, who scored 24 points with 17 rebounds, but made only 10 of 22 shots from the field.

Sarr made a variety of shots – turnaround jumpers, hooks, tip-ins and dunks – as Notre Dame failed to deny him the ball. Mooney and 6-10 Juwan Durham often played behind Sarr and were unable to slow him down.

Sarr was also 6-for-7 from the foul line.

Basketball players hear from former player – age 104

COMSTOCK PARK (AP) — A girls basketball team in the Grand Rapids area got a pep talk from a former player: a 104-year-old woman who played on the first squad at Comstock Park High School.

"That was kind of a new thing: basketball," Madelyn Klenk said of the 1930 team.

WOOD-TV reports Klenk met Comstock Park players Friday as they snapped pictures and swapped stories.

She told them about the big plays and the best players.

My teammate "always knew where I was going to be, and she always handed me the ball and I made the basket," Klenk said.

Players laughed when Klenk told them about tension with boys.

"Oh, the boys teams coach never liked us," she said. "Us girls would win the game, and the boys would lose."

Kings come back from 17 down to beat Pistons

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — De'Aaron Fox scored 11 of his 23 points in the fourth quarter and the Sacramento Kings rallied from 17 down to beat the Detroit Pistons 106-100 on Sunday.

Christian Wood had 20 points and 12 rebounds for the Pistons, who lost point guard Derrick Rose to an apparent ankle injury in the first quarter.

Detroit led 18-1 less than five minutes into the game but couldn't keep up the pace after Rose was hurt. The Pistons fell behind by 10 in the third quarter and were down 102-89 before scoring 10 straight.

seconds at 145.

Gaylord (32-1) scored pins in three of the first four matches to lead 18-6, with Lakeshore's win in that stretch coming from a Case Rohl pin at 160.

Lakeshore (20-2) kept battling, getting decision wins from Zeke Rohl (215) and Malachi Bell (285). The Lancers were assessed a one-point deduction for unsportsmanlike conduct after Bittenbender questioned the lack of a takedown call in the 285-pound match.

"I was a little disappointed in the officiating," Bittenbender said. "I've been doing this for 51 years, the first time I got an unsportsmanlike conduct. I just questioned the call that the official made... next thing I know there's a point missing on our score. That really put a bad taste in my mouth."

Lakeshore trailed 24-11 after 103, but continued to battle. Cameron Litaker won 6-0 at 112 and Bailey DeLaTorre pulled out a hard-fought match at 119, defeating Gus James 4-3. That trimmed the deficit to 24-17.

"Bailey came through in his last match as a senior," Bittenbender said. "That was a big win for us."

The Lancers had a chance to cut the margin further, but Aaron Lucio, normally a 119-pounder, lost a tough 5-4 match to Will Sides at 125.

"That could've went either way," Bittenbender said. "We moved Lucio up and you could see the size differential was huge. We had to try to do what we could to win."

At 130, Lakeshore's Austin Dunn led 3-1 after two periods before being pinned in the third by Bennett Sides, giving the Blue Devils an insurmountable 33-17 lead.

Shane Williams added a late pin at 140 for Lakeshore, which was in the semifinals for the first time since 2010.

Litaker, Lucio, Williams, Micah Hanau, Case Rohl and Zeke Rohl will compete for Lakeshore at next weekend's individual state finals at Ford Field in Detroit.

"Overall, we had a great season," Bittenbender said. "We thought we had a shot, would've loved to have been in the finals. We've got six guys still going. We want to get a state champ or two."

defeat against the Mustangs on Friday.

"It's another opportunity to beat (Portage Central)," St. Joseph coach Tracey Bloodworth said. "We'll look at it like we have all season – taking it one game at a time."

The winner of that game will face Mattawan (10-10). On the other side of the bracket, Lakeshore (6-14) has a bye. The Lancers will likely open against second-seeded Kalamazoo Central (10-10), which faces Portage Northern (3-17) in the first round.

Division 2 at Coloma

Benton Harbor (3-15) won a district championship last season. Though some of its district opponents are new, the Tigers have familiar foes on their side of the bracket. They open against second-seeded Coloma (10-10), with the winner to face South Haven (3-17).

Coloma defeated Benton Harbor 36-27 and South Haven 24-23 in the regular season. Benton Harbor topped South Haven 31-27.

"We know Coloma and South Haven," Benton Harbor coach Kenny Jackson said. "Coloma's tough, but even in that game, we made mistakes. Every mistake we made is a correctable mistake. I think we're going to be prepared.

"Overall I like our district. To win it all is going to be tough."

Though Hamilton (11-9) is not nearly as strong as last season when it reached top-seeded Hawkeyes are still the district favorite. They open against Otsego (8-12), with the winner moving on to play Allegan (8-12).

Division 2 at Buchanan

Edwardsburg (19-1) is the district favorite. The top-seeded Eddies have a favorable draw, opening against Dowagiac (2-18) with Berrien Springs (8-12) awaiting the winner.

The other side of the bracket is strong, with Buchanan (15-5) opening against second-seeded Three Rivers. Niles (11-9) has a bye and will play the winner.

Im wins Honda Classic, Langer picks up 41st Champions win

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. — Sungjae Im started fast and finished stronger Sunday, winning the Honda Classic by one shot over Mackenzie Hughes for his first career PGA Tour victory.

The 21-year-old South Korean closed with a 4-under 66, getting up-and-down for par from a bunker on the par-5 18th.

Hughes (66) made a birdie putt of just outside 50 feet on the 17th hole to give himself a chance.

He missed a 20-foot birdie putt that would have forced a playoff. The last chance belonged to Tommy Fleetwood, who needed birdie on the 18th to catch Im. Fleetwood hit his second shot into the water and made bogey for a 71 to finish alone in third.

Im finished at 6-under 274, matching the second-highest score to win the Honda Classic since it moved to PGA National in 2007. Im, the PGA Tour rookie of the year last season, has played more tournaments and more rounds than anyone in the last two seasons, and he now has a victory to show for it.

He birdied four of the opening five holes to get in the mix, and finished with two birdies – both on the par 3s over water – over the last four holes.

Im became the seventh South Korean to win on tour, and he was the 10th international winner at the Honda Classic in the last 16 years.

Fleetwood, who is still seeking his first PGA Tour win, started the day one shot clear of the field and started birdie-birdie to get to 7 under. Then PGA National did what it usually does, that being not let anyone run away from the pack.

Brendan Steele also had a share of the lead on the back nine. He made only one birdie, on No. 5, and had two bogeys over the last five holes for a 71 to tie for fourth with Byeong Hun An, Lee Westwood and Daniel Berger.

Cologuard Classic

TUCSON, Ariz. – Bernhard Langer took another step closer to the PGA Tour Champions victory record by closing with an 8-under 65 to turn a four-shot deficit into at two-shot win in the Cologuard Classic.

Langer was flawless until the the final hole at Tucson National. He made nine birdies in 17 holes to seize control Sunday, and he wound up two shots ahead of Woody Austin.

Langer won for the 41st time on the 50-and-older circuit. Hale Irwin holds the PGA Tour Champions record with 45 victories, the last one coming in 2007.

That was the year Langer was eligible for the senior circuit. The 62-year-old German now has gone 14 consecutive seasons with at least one victory.

Langer finished at 18-under 201, and moved to the top of the Charles Schwab Cup standings.

Brett Quigley began the final round with a three-shot lead and was still in the mix until a double bogey on the par-5 12th hole. He closed with a 73 and tied for third with Rod Pampling.

SPARTANS

confident heading into the final week. The home crowd was ready to celebrate what many expected would be a night the Terrapins clinched the Big Ten. ESPN's "College GameDay" was on hand and the building was buzzing.

However, four minutes into the game the Spartans had taken the energy out of the building by jumping out to a 14-2 lead and grabbing control.

"It's hard to be in that position," Winston said of the pressure on Maryland. "Basically, the league is yours, should be yours and you got to win out. Not everybody's built for that pressure or not everybody's used to that pressure. It's hard to win a championship. It's hard to come out and play your best each and every night because when you're on top, you'll get every team's best shot and it's hard to do that each and every night. To do that it takes a culture, it takes leadership that's been there before, all those type of things play into it.

"There was a lot more pressure on them tonight than there was on us. We won the game but they still have got to give us gift for us to get a championship, but it's a lot of pressure on their end."

Winston and his teammates proved the pressure wasn't too much for them. The senior guard scored 20 to lead Michigan State while Xavier Tillman had 14 points and 12 rebounds. Malik Hall added 16 points while Rocket Watts scored 13 for the Spartans.

Jalen Smith scored 20 and grabbed 12 rebounds to lead Maryland (23-6, 13-5) while Anthony Cowan scored 13 and Donta Scott chipped in 10 points.

"Michigan State was terrific," Maryland coach Mark Turgeon said. "That was a different team than we played in East Lansing. We were a different team that played in East Lansing but a lot of credit goes to them. They came out and they hit us."

The first half had its share of big swings as Michigan State jumped out to a 14-2 lead, making seven of its first eight shots. Maryland responded with a 13-2 run and eventually pulled even at 23-23 with just more than 10 minutes to play.

The Spartans were the next to make a run, scoring nine in a row as both teams started to go cold from the field. Michigan State went 4:30 without a point while Maryland's drought lasted nearly seven minutes.

Michigan State kept the momentum going late in the half as Kyle Ahrens hit a 3-pointer from the corner, Tillman dunked on a dish from Winston and then Winston closed the half with a 60-footer at the buzzer to give the Spartans a 40-29 lead headed to halftime.

"That was an unbelievably-designed 75-foot play that we put in just last week," Izzo joked about Winston's shot. "So that's coaching fellas. That's coaching."

Michigan State was hot again to open the second half, making its first seven shots as its lead grew to 49-33 after Tillman blocked a Smith shot then sprinted down the floor and took a feed from Watts for a layup. Maryland got within 56-43 after a 3-pointer but Hall answered with his own 3-pointer, then made a pair of free throws to give the Spartans 61-43 lead with 13 minutes to play.

The Terrapins started to chip away from there, pulling within 66-55 with 8:19 to play on a pair of free throws from Aaron Wiggins. The Terps cut it to 66-57, but Watts made a 3-pointer, then a jumper from the free-throw line to push Michigan State's lead to 71-57.

"That's one of the things we've put on the board for the game," Izzo said. "Let's play 40 minutes, not 37. We played 37 a lot of times this year and haven't found a way to win. Maryland on the other hand, has been in some tough games but found a way to win and that's what championship teams do."

Late in the half, Winston converted a four-point play with 4:24 left to give the Spartans a 76-61 lead. Maryland scored five in a row to get back within 10 but Michigan State locked down on defense and put the game away over the final three minutes.

Now Michigan State heads into the final week of the season not only still alive for a title, but feeling much better about how it is playing.

"I think our guys believe we can play with anybody," Izzo said.

WOLVERINES

He banked in another 3-pointer with 1:36 left to make it 73-60.

"Unfortunately, when guys are making shots like that, then obviously their confidence levels are extremely high," Michigan coach Juwan Howard said. "It was a back-breaker for us."

Ohio State was 11 for 21 from 3-point range for 52.4 percent.

"It was just one of those days for balls falling," Washington said.

BIG PICTURE

Michigan: The Wolverines hate to lose to Ohio State, and they did twice this season. This one came after they lost to Wisconsin 81-74 at home on Thursday.

Ohio State: The Buckeyes have shaken off their mid-season malaise and seemed poise to take some momentum into the NCAA Tournament.

"We're built for this," said Walker, a Florida State transfer.

"It's a long season," he said. "I've always said the Big Ten is a tough conference that has it's ups and downs. Right now we're on our up so we'll just try to stay consistent with that and keep going."

POLL IMPLICATIONS

With plenty of Top 25 losses this weekend, the Buckeyes could move up a few slots in the AP Top 25 and likely will be among as many as 10 Big Ten teams to make the NCAA Tournament.

TRAINER'S ROOM

Ohio State forward Kyle Young missed his second game with a high-ankle sprain suffered in the Feb. 23 win over Maryland. He is day-to-day.

UP NEXT

Michigan: Hosts Nebraska on Thursday before finishing the regular season at No. 9 Maryland on March 8.

Ohio State: Hosts Illinois on Thursday before wrapping up the season at No. 24 Michigan State on March 8.

Taking the first steps to a lifetime of running

Elizabeth Ko & Eve Glazier
Ask the Doctors

DEAR DOCTOR: I've read that most New Year's resolutions don't even make it to March, and considering what happened to my plan to start running, I totally believe it. What can I do to be successful?

DEAR READER: You're one of the estimated one-third of Americans who decided to change something about their lives in the new year. And according to a recent survey by YouGov, your goal to start exercising is among the most popular resolutions. (Saving money, losing weight, healthy eating and lessening stress round out the top five.) But as the hundreds of self-help books published each year remind us, change is hard. Even the most disciplined person does better with a game plan.

First, it's important to be as specific as possible about your goal, which means deciding what success will look like. Is it running a set number of days per week? Running a certain distance? Competing in a specific race? Each of these are concrete objectives in which success is recognizable. Once you're clear about what you want, you're ready for the next step, which is a plan for how to achieve it. The trick here is to break down the main goal into reasonable and realistic increments.

For non-runners, a great way to start is with a daily 20-minute walk. Walking is easy, you can do it anywhere and it will jump-start the habit of regular exercise. Once this becomes part of your daily life, you can begin to add a few minutes of running into your walk. Alternate running and walking and gradually – that's an important word when it comes to achieving lasting change – work toward easing that 20-minute walk into a 20-minute run.

If that's enough, congratulations, you made it! If you want to push further, continue with this approach. Identify your new goal, then break it down into incremental steps you know you can stick with. Track your progress, and when you hit a milestone, celebrate with a reward. Whether the process of attaining the final goal takes weeks or months or even the entire year doesn't matter. What's important is that you're taking the time to weave a new habit into your daily life.

All of which brings us to the flip side of progress, which is the inevitable slips and stalls that happen along the way. Chances are, you'll fall off the resolution wagon at some point; it's important to understand that you haven't failed. If it's a small blip, forgive yourself and return to your regular routine. If you've taken a sustained break and lost ground, forgive yourself and start from scratch.

Rebooting the pursuit of a goal can be a challenge, which is why being part of a like-minded community is so helpful. Whether it's a friend or family member, a trainer at a gym, an employer's wellness program or a local running club, having someone to share the journey with can make a big difference. If a running club sounds good to you, the Road Runners Club of America keeps an extensive list at their website, rrca.org.

Advising a teenage daughter with relationship woes

Carolyn Hax

Adapted from an online discussion.

DEAR CAROLYN: My daughter, 17, has a boyfriend in her class. They've been together for about a year. He is a very nice kid and I think in some ways they are good for each other. Yet my daughter, who is a very feeling and open person, tells me daily about all their relationship issues: miscommunications, her feelings of rejection when he pulls away from her, her feelings of guilt when she pulls away from him, personality clashes between him and her girlfriends ... the list goes on.

She also talks about all the work she does to stay together with him even when it's hard. She seems to feel there is something inherently noble or virtuous in staying in a difficult relationship.

If they were much older and married or had kids, I would agree with that, but I don't see much value in a teenage relationship that isn't lots of fun. She often asks me to listen or advise about her relationship. I don't want to belittle her or the relationship. How do I advise? – Listener

DEAR LISTENER: You've got all the right ideas, it sounds like, and just need to air them strategically: "You seem to feel there is something inherently noble or virtuous in staying in a difficult relationship. Fair?" Then listen.

You can also ask: "What if you're just not well suited to each other? Can't a really great person still not be great for you?"

Your job is mostly to listen, but it's OK to nudge her understanding along with open-ended questions. High school relationships can be so emotionally instructive that it's best not to impose yourself too strongly on their inner workings. Again – listen, ask deeper-thought-prompting questions when she gives you room to, set good examples at home and let her figure herself out.

A relationship that's dangerously unhealthy, though, warrants more forceful involvement.

DEAR CAROLYN: I'm scared to tell my mother I want to start therapy. I worked with a therapist briefly when I was 15 (I'm 18 now and still living at home) because my depression spiraled to the point where I was suicidal. I stopped for a number of reasons, not the least of which was that my mother tended to use it as a weapon against me – say, when I couldn't even get out of bed, making snappish remarks about how my therapist would want me to try harder to do housework. I quit therapy, slowly got worse and genuinely did not think I would survive. But I did! And I'm going to college in the fall!

I'm in a much better place now, but I want to thrive, not just get by. You've advised people to let their loved ones help them with calls/appointments/etc., but I'm terrified of repeating what happened when I was 15. Thoughts? – Secretive

DEAR SECRETIVE: Good for you for getting yourself to this point.

Is there a friend who can help you make calls? Favorite teacher? Aunt or uncle? Identifying your "people" is a big part of staying healthy. You can also, presumably, just call your old therapist for advice. That puts the bar much lower for a first step.

So does college, generally – get a jump on it now, and see what your school offers. Take care.

BRIDGE

Bridge administrators strive to keep politics and religion out of the game. The players don't care against whom they are playing, only against which bidding system. Occasionally governments would instruct their teams not to play against certain opponents in international competitions. Happily, though, those days are in the past.

Three decades ago, a team representing the British Houses of Parliament traveled to Stockholm to compete against the Riksdag and other politicians. Today's deal was played by the Indian Ambassador to Sweden, Pushkar Johari, against the Parliamentary captain, the Duke of Atholl, and his partner, Lord Smith.

In four hearts, declarer won trick one with dummy's spade king, cashed the heart ace and played a heart to his king. West's spade discard was an unwelcome sight. How should Ambassador Johari have continued?

To draw trumps would have put the contract all on the diamond finesse. If it won, fine; if it lost, the defenders would have cashed a cascade of clubs.

At the other table, the declarer took the diamond finesse before drawing trumps. Better, but not good enough. East won with the king, put his partner on lead with the club ace and received a diamond ruff. The club king defeated the contract.

The Ambassador found the best play: At trick four, he led a diamond to dummy's ace. As long as it wasn't ruffed, he was planning to drive out the diamond king. He could then handle any defense.

When the singleton king fell, there were cries of, "Keep your cards back, Atholl!"

It was 10 yrs ago today. We little knew that morning, God was going to call your name, In life we loved you dearly, in death we do the same. It broke our hearts to lose you, you did not go alone, For part of us went with you, the day God called you home. You left us peaceful memories, your love is still our guide, And though we cannot see you, you are always at our side. Our Family chain is broken, and nothing seems the same, But as God calls us one by one, the chain will link again.

HOUSE HUNTING?
Watch For Our Open House Ads In The Classifieds!

HOROSCOPE

By EUGENIA LAST

TUESDAY, MARCH 2

Look at what you can accomplish this year and put matters that are out of your control behind you. Make financial and professional growth your priorities, and use your skills to make a difference to your family and community. Embrace change and new beginnings.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Refuse to let uncertainty hold you back. Ask questions, find out where you stand and discern what's possible. Look for opportunities instead of waiting for them to come to you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Make love, not war. Spend quality time with the people you care about most. Address issues causing uncertainty. Ask direct questions and find out what's happening. Avoid making a snap decision.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A change in attitude will encourage personal growth, better relationships and an opportunity to get involved in something that will influence what you pursue and the way you learn.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Consider the validity of information being offered to you. Knowledge is power, so do your research and avoid being caught in a compromising position. Don't make a decision under pressure.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Keep your feelings to yourself. Use your knowledge and skills in unique ways. Push yourself to be more physical and to make lifestyle changes that will improve your health.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Do what you can to help others, but don't let anyone take advantage of your kindness or generosity. If you crave change, focus on self-improvement, not on trying to alter someone else.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Curiosity will take you in a new direction. Your thirst for knowledge will lead to people who have something interesting to share. Make a change that will improve your health, relationships and personal life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Ignore people who are unreasonable or demanding. You have enough responsibilities to tackle without taking on someone else's chores. Don't spend money on something you don't need.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) A change of heart will help you move in a fresh new direction. Embrace the future and prepare to let your imagination take you on an extraordinary journey that will lead to satisfaction.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Say no to people using emotional tactics in an attempt to get you to do something. Look out for your best interest and live within your means.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Look at all sides of a situation before you make a decision. Uncertainty should be an indicator to sit tight and wait to see what unfolds before you get involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Work alone. Concentrate on home- and self-improvements that will help ease stress and make your life more manageable. Personal gain and fitness should be your priorities.

Layout Assistant

Duties will include, but are not limited to advertising placement in multiple publications, assisting with the coordination of layouts, classified pagination and page production throughout the company.

Must have good computer skills and work at a quick pace. Experience with word processing, spreadsheets and InDesign necessary.

Minimum requirement is a high school diploma but some college is preferred.

This is a full-time position. Shift is roughly 11am-7pm, Monday - Friday, subject to change.
